Joining the IMPETUS accelerator empowers us to work together with passionate young minds for a more sustainable future.

Summary

The aim of the project is to support young people in committing to sustainable lifestyles. An ongoing citizen science research in which young researchers use qualitative methods and participatory video making to find out about problems and solutions in relation to food production and consumption will be upscaled to assure more social impact to their work. Led by Artemisszio Foundation, providing scientific mentorship to its partners, the project links five different youth organizations working directly with young people of different origins, economic and cultural backgrounds. In each organization young people - helped by youth workers trained by Artemisszio - define their specific research topics and questions. The research groups will meet once physically to share their results, youth workers will have a reflection meeting, case studies and a guidebook will be written, a multiplier event and an online sharing event will be organized to increase the visibility of this collective work.
