Co-creating and co-designing a research and some interventions about the access to food sovereignty from the migrant collective

Summary

Our project is a citizen-led initiative that investigates the exclusion of migrant communities from local food sovereignty networks in Valencia and their access to a quality diet. A pilot group of 10 migrants will co-design and carry out activities such as surveys, focus groups, in-depth interviews and counter mapping workshops to identify barriers and co-create solutions.

The project actively involves the University, migrants associations, food sovereignty groups and the local social services to ensure a broad, collaborative impact.

Key outputs include reports, a map of accessible food points and a self-published fanzine sharing migrants' food stories and further results. The project fosters intercultural dialogue, epistemic justice, and social cohesion by empowering marginalised groups to produce knowledge and solutions for the current problems.
